

I live in the Florida Keys; there are only two radio stations available and I don't care for either of them. Satellite radio has "saved by sanity" in the two years I've lived here. It's especially useful for long trips, such as when I drive to visit a friend in South Carolina. I haven't yet used satellite's traffic reports, but they would be very useful before I set out for Miami or Fort Lauderdale. The local Keys radio stations don't, of course, give traffic conditions for those areas.

I urge you not to restrict satellite radio's programming - please let the consumers decide.
